EXCERPT

Naomi is 59-year-old and a year less than what her National Identity indicates. Recently the organization she has worked for 5 years was coming to a close because of lack of funding from the donor. She was one of the qualified nurses that were absorbed by the County government since the organization is coming to an end. After reporting into the new employer, she could not believe the shocking news she got from her new boss one week to the job. According to the new boss she was supposed to be retiring in two days' time according to the Kenyan constitution. She was told not to report to work in two days. Naomi has worked in several non-governmental organizations as a qualified nurse. Her performance has made her climb from one position to another. She confessed that she loved her work and as far as she can remember more time was spent at her places of work than in other areas of her life. She says she was not ready to go home even if it meant doing pro-bono services because she says her patients will miss her and she feels that no colleagues will match her work. She was requested by the employer to seek for counseling which they offered to pay for. Naomi confesses to you bitterly why she is being terminated and yet she still has one year to go by a boss who has known her for long
