Carol, 15 years old, is the youngest of six children, with four older brothers. Her father is very indulgent, pampering her and giving her whatever she wants, claiming that she resembles his late mother, whom he deeply loved. Despite her mother's efforts to teach Carol basic household chores, her father insists that Carol should be treated like a princess. As a result, her brothers have organized themselves to exclude her from their conversations and activities, leading Carol to feel isolated, lonely, and confused about why they seem to dislike her. Recently, Carol started high school as a boarder and is struggling with essential tasks such as cleaning her clothes, polishing her shoes, and other basic hygiene responsibilities. She has found it challenging to make new friends and is unhappy with her current situation. Carol has requested her parents to transfer her to a day school or she will not return for the next term.
