EXCERPT

Timothy had a tooth ache and went to a chemist for painkillers. After describing how he was feeling he was encouraged to test for blood sugar levels and hypertension. To his disbelief, he tested positive for both. The pharmacist advised that he disclose this to the dentist before tooth extraction. He thought that he may have the two conditions made him anxious, afraid and confused. After a week of agonizing pain, he visits the dentist for tooth extraction whereby the dentist requested for the latest medical tests. On going to the laboratory, it is confirmed that he is diabetic and hypertensive. He is in shock and starts trembling, therefore the dentist refers him to the medical conditions' counsellor
